Factors Associated with Patients' Decisions to Sign Advance Directives - Xuejia Li 2013

Abstract: The objective is to identify factors associated with patients' decisions to sign advance directives (ADs). Retrospective database analysis was performed on 9,416 current home health patients and hospice discharges patients from the 2007 National Home and Hospice Care Survey (NHHCS). Documentation of ADs continues to rise in America, specifically in home and hospice settings. Do-not-resuscitate order (DNR) and durable power of attorney were the most common types of ADs. Self-pay patients were the population having the highest rate of having an AD. Older age, race (White), sex (male), mental illness and life expectancy were factors influencing the likelihood of choosing an AD. Efforts to improve ADs documentation rates call for consideration of the decision-making associated factors analyzed in this study as well as others such as healthcare professionals or family members.

Meeting Joint Commission Compliance by Improving the Chart Audit Process - Nicole Hiroi 2017

A hospice and home health care agency with an estimated 300 current patients looking to gain Joint Commission accreditation tasked its quality improvement department with identifying and improving deficiencies in the nursing documentation of patients' charts. In order to do so, a redesign of their current chart auditing system needed to occur to take the process from pen and paper to an electronic database where the data gathered from the audit could be disseminated. The quality improvement team focused on ensuring that the new electronic process was user-friendly, encompassed all the quality areas needed, and allowed charts to be reviewed more quickly. Once the electronic audit was implemented, preliminary surveys showed that nurses were pleased with the new program and the time needed to complete the audit decreased from 45 minutes to 20 minutes. The hospice and home health care agency expects to gain Joint Commission accreditation once the changes are firmly in place.

The Hospice Companion - Perry G Fine 2008-06-03

The Hospice Companion is designed to promote, establish, maintain and continuously improve comprehensive systems of care that ensure the highest quality of services to meet the needs of patients and their families during the last phase of life. On behalf of their patients, all hospice providers must inculcate processes of care that lead to maximal comfort and functional capacities, and a sense of being valued throughout the final stages of any chronic and progressive illness. The values embodied in The Hospice Companion reflect a commitment to these premises: - The dying patient's achievable goals are the highest priority of care. -Family preferences are respected and supported whenever possible. -All terminally ill patients and their families deserve access to hospice care. -Ongoing investment to advance the art and science of palliative care is a moral imperative. -The spirit of Hospice as the most humanistic form of care at the end of life must be continually nurtured through interdisciplinary work. More than ever it is incumbent upon those who provide care to those with life-limiting illnesses to be keenly aware of both the extent and the limits of the technological advances that can add either great burden or great benefit to seriously ill patients and their families. The Hospice Companion has been created to operationalize the mission and values of modern-day Hospice through the individual and combined efforts of our most valuable asset, the Hospice professional. The title word 'Companion' was expressly chosen for the profound meaning it suggests: that companionship, in the many forms it can take, is the key ingredient to care. This book represents the practical embodiment of the basic, fundamental elements of care, through a focus on common problems confronting patients, their families, and their caregivers. The Hospice Companion is intended as a guide through which some mastery over the seemingly complex, challenging, and oftentimes chaotic world of advanced disease may be derived. Use of this 'tool' to direct processes of care during the intense interpersonal experiences of hospice work should allow the greatest opportunity for personal and professional growth and a deeply gratifying sense of accomplishment as you proceed in the all-important work of caring for the dying.

Enhancing Data Systems to Improve the Quality of Cancer Care - National Research Council 2000-10-09

One of the barriers to improving the quality of cancer care in the United States is the inadequacy of data systems. Out-of-date or incomplete information about the performance of doctors, hospitals, health plans, and public agencies makes it hard to gauge the quality of care. Augmenting today's data systems could start to fill the gap. This report examines the strengths and weaknesses of current systems and makes recommendations for enhancing data systems to improve the quality of cancer care. The board's recommendations fall into three key areas: Enhance key elements of the data system infrastructure (i.e., quality-of-care measures, cancer registries and databases, data collection technologies, and analytic capacity). Expand support for analyses of quality of cancer care using existing data systems. Monitor the effectiveness of data systems to promote quality improvement within health systems.

Social Work Awareness of Hospice Referral Barriers in the Veterans Health Administration - Shin Yun 2022

Managed by an interdisciplinary team of healthcare professionals, hospice provides relief from pain and offers supportive services at the end of a patient's life. However, services are only provided for an average of 89.6 days (Medicare Payment Advisory Commission, 2021). This study explores the barriers to hospice and looks at how social workers are involved in and can better aid the referral process. Sources of information for this study included secondary data from a Veterans Affairs Medical Center and first-hand semi-structured interviews with social workers employed there. An explanatory sequential mixed methods design was used to analyze a sample of 262 hospice/palliative care referrals at the VA Medical Center gleaned from 1250 records spanning 2015 to 2020. Demographics, hospice/palliative care consults, and social work documentation were analyzed in SPSS using frequencies and inferential statistics. Informed by this secondary analysis, semi-structured interviews were conducted with five social workers using a phenomenological approach. They were transcribed and analyzed through NVivo (2018). Results showed that most of the hospice referrals at the VA Medical Center were accepted but the average length of stay on hospice was 29.5 days. The primary reason for barriers to hospice referrals was a lack of advance care planning conversations between surrogates and their medical team. Social workers were involved at varying levels and played differing roles depending on the team's dynamics and the social worker's comfort level. These findings indicate the need for social workers to incorporate palliative care into their practice to help support patients in receiving medical care consistent with their values, goals, and preferences. Findings also suggest that social workers can explore their positions in interdisciplinary teams to take a more active role in providing education about hospice.

Dignity Therapy - Harvey Max Chochinov 2012-01-04

Maintaining dignity for patients approaching death is a core principle of palliative care. Dignity therapy, a psychological intervention developed by Dr. Harvey Max Chochinov and his internationally lauded research group, has been designed specifically to address many of the psychological, existential, and spiritual challenges that patients and their families face as they grapple with the reality of life drawing to a close. In the first book to lay out the blueprint for this unique and meaningful intervention, Chochinov addresses one of the most important dimensions of being human. Being alive means being vulnerable and mortal; he argues that dignity therapy offers a way to preserve meaning and hope for patients approaching death. With history and foundations of dignity in care, and step by step guidance for readers interested in implementing the program, this volume illuminates how dignity therapy can change end-of-life experience for those about to die - and for those who will grieve their passing.
